- The S&P/ASX 200 Index finished the month lower with a 2.4% fall during May. The market struggled as concerns around the picture of the global growth profile re-emerged with familiar issues resurfacing around the Chinese economy and European sovereign debt. Downgrades to Chinese growth forecasts from tighter monetary and fiscal conditions in that country have weighed on equity markets. Sovereign debt issues in Greece impacted the international banking sector as authorities debated the best course of action and what shape a rescue package may take.
- A number of the LICs are now displaying improved 12 month performance figures on an absolute basis, having cycled some tough comparable numbers during the past couple of months. Domestic investors should take note of the attractive absolute returns generated over the past year, particularly amongst the small to mid cap managers.
- The divergence in the returns between the LIC share prices and their portfolio's continues. Interestingly, as a broad observation of some of the LICs that we cover, the share price performance of the smaller cap focussed LICs have outperformed their portfolios during the past twelve months. Conversely some of the larger cap LIC share prices have struggled to replicate the performance of their portfolios.
- Premiums and discounts to closing prices and performance data are summarised as per below:
