Portfolio update

Despite continued lockdowns throughout Europe, markets were buoyed by the aggressive rollout of the coronavirus vaccine in the United States and United Kingdom, with approximately 30% and 50% of the population receiving their first dose by the end of the March quarter.

The United States 10-year bond yield reacted positively, increasing 91 basis points over the quarter to 1.74% as the market began to factor in inflationary expectations, which have been fuelled by the unprecedented fiscal and monetary support over the past 12 months. The Biden administration released details of a USD2.2 trillion infrastructure stimulus package over the next eight years, which would be funded largely by corporate tax increases, with the federal corporate tax rate increasing from 21% to 28%. The most significant macroeconomic event for the month was the March Federal Open Market Committee meeting, with the United States Federal Reserve showing no signs of tapering, keeping interest rates near zero until 2023.

Domestically, the Australian economy continued to recover ahead of expectations. Data points including unemployment, retail sales, car sales, building approvals and house prices were materially better than anticipated, leading to upgrades in gross domestic product expectations. The Reserve Bank of Australia remained committed to its 0.1% cash rate target by 2024 and continued its quantitative easing program. The February 2021 reporting season was one the best in 20 years, with the average earnings per share estimates upgraded by approximately 5%. The vast majority of these upgrades were driven by cost containment measures, with industrial companies revising costs down by 150 basis points despite ongoing pressures in raw materials, freight and wages.

Growing confidence on the economic recovery in Australia saw the continuation of the shift from growth companies into value and cyclical companies, with financials, resources, tourism and property outperforming coronavirus beneficiaries, namely technology, healthcare and retail. While the shift toward value companies has been rapid, we note that the gap between the valuation of growth companies and value companies remains the highest it has been in 50 years. For these reasons, we expect this shift to continue and see plenty of attractive opportunities that fit our investment process.

During the March quarter the portfolio outperformed by 4.0% compared to the S&P/ASX Small Ordinaries Accumulation Index. Leading into the February reporting season we re-positioned the portfolio towards cyclical industries such as tourism, traditional media, financials, and construction and into companies that had significant offshore exposure in coronavirus impacted regions. These decisions benefitted the investment portfolio, with our strongest performers over the quarter being cyclical companies such as advertising company Enero Group (ASX: EGG), television and newspaper company Seven West Media (ASX: SWM) and wine manufacturer Australian Vintage (ASX: AVG). Detractors to the portfolio came from the technology and healthcare sectors, with Infomedia (ASX: IFM) and CleanSpace Holdings (ASX: CSX) performing poorly due to earnings downgrades.

The investment team has been diligent in sourcing new ideas for the portfolio that will benefit from a successful rollout of a vaccine. While we have reduced exposure to e-commerce companies that have benefitted from lockdowns, we have added retailers such as Dusk (ASX: DSK) and Universal Store Holdings (ASX: UNI) which will benefit from increased foot traffic through shopping centres. Despite mining services companies performing poorly through reporting season, we believe valuations remain attractive with companies such as MACA (ASX: MLD), SRG Global (ASX: SRG) and Duratec (ASX: DUR) set to benefit from a more positive outlook.

While we expect volatility to remain high over the course of 2021, we are constructive on the outlook for equities. The successful inoculation in countries that were heavily impacted by the coronavirus provides a case for optimism. We believe that economic data will continue to surprise on the upside given the ongoing fiscal and monetary support, and that rising bond yields reflect the stronger-than-expected levels of economic growth globally. We do not yet see rising inflation as a concern given the continued uncertainty that remains. Given the ongoing volatility, we have continued to focus on investing in companies offering the most liquidity with 67% of the portfolio able to be sold within 30 days as at 31 March 2021. We ended the quarter with cash levels of 10.0% as at 31 March 2021.
