The WAM Active (ASX: WAA) investment portfolio increased in September. Technology company Nuix (ASX: NXL), an investigative software provider used by banks, audit firms and government agencies, contributed to the investment portfolio performance on the back of a new product launch and recently announced medium-term growth initiatives. Codan (ASX: CDA), a manufacturer and supplier of communications, metal detection and mining technology also contributed to the investment portfolio performance after announcing the acquisition of a US-based provider of leading tactical communications, Kägwerks.

Nuix held its annual investor day where it announced its expansion into deep learning and integration with options in public artificial intelligence (AI) platforms which accelerates performance of search and processing. During the month, the company appointed Peter McClelland, who brings with him over 25 years of experience in this field, as Chief Financial Officer. We believe Nuix's advancement in AI integration will add to the existing growth profile of the business as they continue to expand their global market share.

Codan announced the acquisition of Kägwerks which provides lightweight communications equipment to the US Department of Defense through its DOCK branded solutions. This technology allows superior situational awareness and strategic advantage in field operations by optimising real-time battlefield intelligence. We view this acquisition as positive to Codan's Radio Communications segment as it is complimentary to Codan's long-term growth strategy and should drive further earnings growth.

Fully franked dividends since inception
